

Chapter 2/Lesson 3 notes

- A code of law is a written collection of laws that apply to the people ruled by one government.
- Hammurabi wrote laws for his empire and had them on display in his cities.
- Assyrian armies were especially powerful because they used horse-drawn chariots in war.
- The city-state of Nineveh used an aqueduct to bring water to the city from 30 miles away.
- The city-state of Babylon was recognized as the most important city in Mesopotamia for over 1,000 years.